Glacier

Glaciers, perennial accumulations of ice, snow, sediment, rock and water, respond to changes in temperature, snowfall and geologic forces. Several components make up a glacial system: the ice and sediment contained in the glacier; the valleys, fiords and rock features it flows over, on, or around; and the deposits left by its retreat or advance. New snow layers create pressure on existing layers of snow and ice. This process change snow to firn, a dense granular snow. After the first season's melt, snow becomes firn. As it is compressed further, firn becomes ice. As the snow collects over many years, an ice field forms. Ice flows down the valleys and slopes of the mountains to the lower elevations, and glaciers are born.

The city tour takes drive in the most interesting parts of Helsinki, such as the historical center with drive thru The Queen Stone, the Presidential, the Presidential Palace, the Parliament building, Finlandia Hall, and Opera Olympic Stadium.

Continue visit the most famous attractions in Helsinki

- The Temppeliaukio Church (Temppeliaukion Kirkko) was built in 1968-1969. The church is built into solid rock, therefore, it is also known as the Church of the Rock. Natural light brightens the inside through 180 glasses between the dome and the wall. The church is often used for concerts, because of the excellent acoustics.
- Tuomiokirkko ~ A distinct landmark in the scenery of central Helsinki, with a tall green dome surrounded by four smaller domes, the church was build in 1830-1852, representing the neoclassical style. It was originally designed by Carl Ludvig Engel, the building forming the climax of the whole Senate Square designed by Engel, surrounded by a number of buildings all designed by him. Today the cathedral is one of the most popular tourist attractions in Helsinki. Annually more than 350,000 people visit the church; some of them to attend religious events but most are tourist. The church is in regular use for both worship services and special events such as weddings.
- Uspenskin katedraali ~ Built in the Russian Byzantine style in 1862-1868, and is the biggest Orthodox Church in Western Europe. And was styled after an old church built in the 16th century near Moscow in Russia.
- Kauppatori (The Market Square) ~ Is bustling with activity of vendors selling fresh Finnish food and souvenirs. There are also many outdoor cafes at the square. Some cafes also provide meat pastries, and one advertises their pastries as being "the best in the Market Square... in Helsinki... in Finland!"

- The Sibelius Monument ~ The Sibelius Society of Finland which was established in 1957 organized a competition for a Sibelius monument. The multi-dimensional structure of the monument, which enables the spectators to go inside the monument and the echo and sounds created in its pipes, make the monument exceptional. Viewed from a distance the shape of the monument melts together with the wall of forest and the rough rock face. The description of nature in the music of Sibelius gains a visual expression in the monument.
